Mark Kovac, Staff Reporter, Columbus Dispatch: Did Michael Daniels say something about an emergency resolution and a Select Committee on racism and racial equity? What's that all about?

Michael Daniels, Director, Justice Policy and Programs: I'll email you all the documentation for the details.

Mr. Kovac: Is this something the Commissioners already approved?

Mr. Daniels: It is action taken by the Criminal Justice Planning Board, not by the Board of Commissioners.

Mr. Kovac: Commissioners, you all obviously must support that move.

Commissioners: Yes.

Mr. Kovac: Do you have anything else in the works for the immediate future in response to some of the outpouring of stuff that's going on downtown?

Commissioner Boyce: There will be a press conference later today at the Columbus Urban League, that I'll be a part of. Commissioner O'Grady will be there, and I know Commissioner Brown supports the event, where a coalition has developed in the community that is going to endorse and embrace a number of recommended changes that the city has queued up through a consultant and work that they did, as well as our work in poverty, and the declaration of racism as a public health crisis. The thing which you got to remember about our work, we're doing technical work around this stuff, but it's also designed to spur other things to happen, and in my opinion, this is the way it's supposed to work. It's supposed to take-on a life of its own with other cities, agencies, and businesses. So, in my mind, every time we're seeing these pop-up resolutions or pop-up actions, I think it's a part of our advocacy. To me, it's working and that's what is supposed to happen.

Commissioner Brown: I would agree. I know that the business community members are doing their own resolutions and making changes in their own companies spurred on by a lot of the work that we did, but not just that. I think they're seeing things in the community that are spurring the changes that they want to make, and I know that they'll be part of the press conference today. Hundreds of businesses have already signed on to the city's resolution to make this part of their own companies.

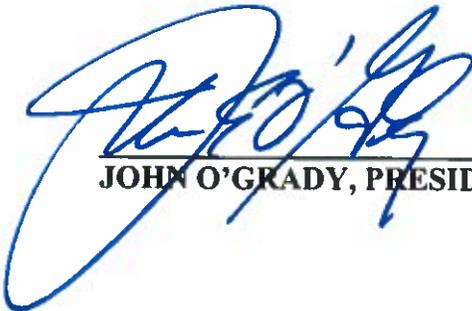

President O'Grady: To both Commissioner Boyce and Commissioner Brown's points, we've been doing our work for the last couple of years and folks have taken notice. Not only across the community here, but across the state, the country, and now folks are starting to follow suit. The City of Columbus passed a resolution last night supported by the mayor. I talked to County Commissioners from across the state yesterday. The City of Cleveland and Cuyahoga County thanked us because they used our blueprint, they used our language to pass a resolution declaring racism a public health crisis in Cuyahoga County.

Kenneth Wilson, County Administrator: I was just going to add, there's a resolution in the works that will be briefed soon. The Board of Commissioners will be supporting in the collaboration with Franklin County Public Health, in hiring an Associate Director of Equity and Inclusion. This position will provide strategic oversight and lead efforts in the community, creating partnerships and collaborations, and alliances that will help Franklin County Public Health's equity-based initiatives and priorities, and this position will be focused on race, disability, the LGBTQ community, and culturally and historically underserved communities. So, under the Boards' guidance, we're going to have a lot of actions associated with the declaration of racism as a public crisis.

With no further business before the Board, the meeting was adjourned at 9:41 A.M.
