Racial disparity was an overarching problem raised throughout the process by the Steering Committee, as well as Focus and Work Groups. To reduce poverty, committee members said it was important to have a frank conversation about the historic and current role that racial inequities play on poverty.

The Board of Commissioners will initiate racial equity training that will prompt people to look deeper into their own biases. Attendees of the initial training will include Commissioners, County Administration, Board of Commissioners and their staff, Leadership Council Chairs and other community partners. The county will then work with the area nonprofits in drafting a curriculum that can be replicated and provided to county staff, businesses and nonprofits across the county. In addition, county officials are also planning to do a review of the county’s own policies and procedures to if any merit change.
